Hampton man pleads guilty in scamming scheme

By Peter Dujardin

NEWPORT NEWS — A Hampton man pleaded guilty last week to bilking his way through the Hampton Roads — out of more than $500,000 in cash over six years.

Federal prosecutors say the defendant, Peter Adams, 40, of Newport News, pleaded guilty to a multi-million-dollar insurance scheme in an industrial accident years earlier. But to get that payout, Rice told them, he had to pay for a series of attorney fees.

He told the victims — including a bricklayer and a blind man — that they'd get their money back, but with the caveat that they had to pay for the attorney fees.

"He tricked victims into giving him large sums of money using false representations," the U.S. Attorney said.

That man, now 74, paid Rice more than $500,000 over six years, the prosecutor said. Adams also hid his identity from his friends and family.

The scheme ran between 2015 and 2021, but prosecutors say it began in 2013. Adams told them he had a "good opportunity" with a guaranteed return, "the public defender" said.

with a man who purported to be working for a company named "Energy Rice's inheritance."

But the bricklayer got fed up with the scheme and filed a complaint with the police in 2017.

"The defendant maintained a cash life bank," the statement said. "This made it possible for the defendant to receive that sizable income from and fraudulent transactions."

Despite all the money that Adams had received, the victims were left with nothing. Adams said he had a "good opportunity" with a guaranteed return, "the public defender" said.

Rice said he didn't earn enough to be a "cent-millionaire" — he was making more than $500,000 a year, but he was a "driver" in a car that was "driving" him. Adams said he had a "good opportunity" with a guaranteed return, "the public defender" said.

Rice was arrested Sept. 15, 2021, in Hampton. Adams said he had a "good opportunity" with a guaranteed return, "the public defender" said.
